"Regulation is designed to protect you, to make sure you don't get ripped off by banks and other financial institutions, that we make sure they are sound institutions," he said. Montreal-based BMO Capital Markets CEO Bill Downe was supposed to be in Ottawa on Wednesday for a speech of his own, but he had to pull out at the last minute. So his speech went to a re-configured Economic Club of Canada. And it could have been either speaker who delivered this line during the Economic Club speech on Wednesday. "When we talk about regulation, we're talking about the regulation of risk-taking in our financial system." Downe went on to say: "We've had 10 years of regulatory reform here in Canada and this is the most important one." The shift in the banking sector has been happening for a long time, but the Bank of Canada's economic statement on Wednesday came right out and said it. "The Bank of Canada intends to pursue monetary policy in a non-traditional way in light of the recent and expected return of normal economic conditions," it said. "The Bank expects to gradually reduce its target for the overnight rate, from 1.0 per cent, if and when the forecast path for the target moved to a neutral one, and, if the economy were to begin to diverge from the forecast path in a meaningful way, to adjust the target if necessary." This was something that was not expected from the central bank, but it set off a firestorm of discussion on Wednesday about when the Bank of Canada will start to roll out more 82157476af
